Professional Exemption Checklist

Employees who are in training to become executive, administration, professional, computer professional, or outside sales employees but do not actually perform exempt duties do not qualify for exemption.

The duties portion of the administrative exemption test establishes a two-part inquiry for determining whether an employee performs exempt administrative duties. First, the type of work and primary duty must be duties directly related to management or general business operations of the employer or the employer's customers. Second, the primary duty must include the exercise of discretion and independent judgment with respect to matters of significance.

To qualify as an administrative employee exemption, all of the following tests must be met:

Salary Test

1. The employee must be compensated on a salary basis at a rate not less than $455 per week ($23,660 annually);

Duties Test

1. The employee's primary duty must be the performance of work requiring advanced knowledge; defined as work which is predominantly intellectual in character and which includes work requiring the consistent exercise of discretion and judgement;
2. The advanced knowledge must be in a field of science or learning. This includes only occupations that have a recognized professional status. It does not include occupations in the mechanical arts or skilled trades, which may require knowledge of an advanced type but are not in a field of science or learning; and
3. The advanced knowledge must be customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction.

Definitions:

Primary Duty

"Primary duty" means the principal, main, major or most important duty that the employee performs. Determination of an employee's primary duty must be based on all the facts in a particular case, with the major emphasis on the character of the employee's job as a whole.

Work Requiring Advanced Knowledge

"Work requiring advanced knowledge" means work which is predominantly intellectual in character, and which includes work requiring the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment. Professional work is therefore distinguished from work involving routine mental, manual, mechanical or physical work. A professional employee generally uses the advanced knowledge to analyze, interpret or make deductions from varying facts or circumstances. Advanced knowledge cannot be attained at the high school level.

Field of Science or Learning

Fields of science or learning include law, medicine, theology, accounting, actuarial computation, engineering, architecture, teaching, and various types of physical, chemical and biological sciences, pharmacy and other occupations that have a recognized status and are distinguishable from the mechanical arts or skilled trades.

Customarily Acquired by a Prolonged Course of Specialized Intellectual Instruction

The learned professional exemption is restricted to professions where specialized academic training is a standard prerequisite for entrance into the profession. The best evidence of meeting this requirement is having the appropriate academic degree. However, the work "customarily" means the exemption may be available to employees in such professions who have substantially the same knowledge level and perform substantially the same work as the degreed employees, but who attained the advanced knowledge through a combination of work experience and intellectual instruction. This exemption does not apply to occupations in which most employees acquire their skill by experience rather than by advanced specialized intellectual instruction.

Discretion and Independent Judgment

In general, the exercise of discretion and independent judgment involves the comparison and the evaluation of possible courses of conduct and acting or making a decision after the various possibilities have been considered. The exercise of discretion and independent judgment must be more than the use of skill in applying well-established techniques, procedures or specific standards described in manuals or other sources.

The exercise of discretion and independent judgment implies that one has authority to make an independent choice, free from immediate direction or supervision. However, discretion and independent judgment can be exercised even if the decision or recommendation is reviewed at a higher level. Thus, the term "discretion and independent judgment" does not require that the decisions being made have to be final or free from review. The fact that one's decisions may be subject to review and that upon occasion the decisions are revised or reversed after review does not mean that one is not exercising discretion and independent judgment.

The exercise of discretion and independent judgement must be more than the use of skill in applying well-established techniques, procedures or specific standards described in manuals or other sources.
